MEDICAL MATTERS.

A CURIOUS CASE OF SURGERY .- Some time ago, a little child of Mr. Lothrop, at the foot of Salisbury street, was playing with a pair of bivalve shells, round in form, and each fully as large as the eighth of a dollar, when one of them disappeared, and nothing could be found of it. After several weeks there was an appearance of something growing in the child's mouth, in the roof of it. The child was carried to Dr. Clark, the City Physician, who pronounced it a case of the enlargement of some bone, the anatomical name of which is too hard for us, but we will call it one of the rafters of the mouth. Subsequently Dr. Warren was consulted, who confirmed Dr. Clark's opinion, and proposed to operate to reduce the size of the enlarged bone. On cutting around the protuberance, the before-mentioned shell fell out. It seems to have adhered, the concave side up, to the roof of the mouth, until it had become completely imbedded under the skin .- Boston Chronotype. STUDY OF MEDICINE IN PARIS .- A correspondent of the Newark Daily Advertiser says: Medicine, he writes, is studied very differently in Paris and in the United States. There is in that capital very little office study, and indeed very little study of books at all. Each student inscribes his name with a government officer, and from that date his time commences. His term is four years, and during that time he is required to pass five examinations, paying $10 for each; the whole expenses of the four years' study are about $200. Each branch of study receives a special examination. In the United States, on the contrary, there being but one examination for all branches of study, it is of course impossible for the student thoroughly and perfectly to prepare himself in each.

In France, too, a medical man usually selects some one branch of the profession, to which he gives his entire attention, and thus reaches a distinction in it which cannot be attained by those who seek proficiency in several departments. The greater part of the time of students in French schools, is spent at the bedside in hospitals and in acquiring a practical knowledge of the subject. The Physician in attendance points out to them the peculiarities of each case, and his remarks are written down and form manuscript books of great value in after life, inasmuch as they comprise the theories and practice of the most eminent practitioners. Having seen the causes themselves, the student derives from this method of study a far clearer and more practical knowledge than he could possibly get from books.

ACADEMY OF SCIENCES .- Sitting of April 1 .- M. Gay Lussac gave an account of the theory of M. Magnus, relative to the chemical phenomena of respiration. According to this theory, the oxygen of the air is absorbed in the act of breathing by the arterial blood in the lungs, and is from thence carried to the circulation. In its passage, and by means of capilliary tubes, a certain quantity combines partly with carbon to form carbonic acid, which remains in solution in the blood, and partly with hydrogen to form water. The blood thus charged with carbonic acid, and transformed into venous blood, arrives in that animates our Ohio friends, in relation to this the lungs, where it abandons to the air its carbonic acid, again takes up oxygen, and, transformed into arterial blood, commences a new revolution. The experiments made by M. Magnus confirm his theory to a certain extent, but are not considered by M. Gay Lussac to be conclusive. He intends, in conju with M. Majendie, to examine anew, and with great care, all the chemical phenomena of respiration.

THE LUNGS .- On examination, the lungs will be found full of innumerable little holes, like a sponge. These holes are the cells into which the air enters when we breathe. So great is their number that they have been calculated to amount to 170,000,000, forming a surface thirty times greater than the human body. Every one of these cells is provided with a net work of blood vessels, by means of which the blood is brought into immediate contact with the air over every portion of their surface. When this great amount is taken into consideration, we shall at once feel how necessary it is to supply pure air to the lungs with every breath we draw.

William Goodwin, of New Haven, states in one of the papers in that city, that during the last four years he has watched the beds of the sick and the dying one thousand and one nights, and that he was never poorer in purse, richer in health, nor higher in spirits than at the present time.

Lafitte, "the Pirate of the Gulf." The noted chief of Barritaria, whom tale-writers and rhymers have invested with all the attributes of heroism belonging in any case to freebooters, cutthroats, or conquerors, and with the many virtues which never in any case belong to these popular gentry, is cut down by the New Orleans Delta, to the dimensions of a mere wholsale smuggler. And a smuggler, too, who was not even a common sailor, nor in any sense a man of blood, though he stands in tradition and literature as the prince of piratical navigators, whom Beelzebub himself couldn't catch upon the ocean, and as perhaps the genteelest cutthroat of all who were contemporaries with Napoleon Bona-

The informant of the Delta is an old French gentleman, who knew Lafitte well, and says he was his personal friend. We would suggest to the Delta, that an old and very distinguished member of the New Orleans Bar, could it he were disposed, and might if he were properly approached, throw some light upon the career of Lafitte, as would either verify or completely upset the representations of its informant. The Delta's account of the wizzard skipper and blood-thirsty pirate, is as follows:

"Lafitte," our companion continued, "was born in Bordeaux, and served his time to the blacksmith trade. He came to this country quite a young man, and kept a little shop for some time on the levee. Here he remained for several years, making an honest living at his trade, when, one day, he was persuaded by some Spaniards on the levee-some of whom are now living in your city, in wealth and respectability-to go into the smuggling trade. He went into partnership with the owner of a vessel trading between New Orleans and the West India Islands. He remained in the city to dispose of the goods snuggled, whilst his partner managed the ship. Meeting with great success he employed several other vessels, and taking advantage of the confusion incident to the situation of Louisiana, in its transfer from Spain to France, and from France to the United States, he located himself at Barataria, a bay opening into the Gulf of Mexico, where his vessels unloaded, and their cargoes were sent up in small boats and pirogues, through the bayous and canals, to the Mississippi, and were taken across the river in boats disguised as those of planters. The articles thus smuggled, were d sposee of by numerous agents, and handsame profits were made upon them. After a while, the attention of the Government being attracted to his operations, a naval force, under the command of Captain Patterson, was sent down to break Lafitte and his men made out to escape, but all their property was confiscated, their houses burned to from Mansfield through Sidney to Indianapolis-will be the ground, and not a vestige now remains of the establishment. Thus driven out to sea, Lafitte's men took to their vessels, and were dodging about the islands in the Gulf, when the English invading force arrived at the mouth of the Mississippi. Proposals were then submitted to Lafftte, to allow him a handsome annuity and an honorable position in the English navy, if he would pilot the British force up to the city, or inform them of the most practicable route for reaching the city. Lafitte immediately wrote to Governor Claiborne of the proposal and begged to be permitted to fight under the flag of the United States. the means of punishment. This is briefly the history of Lafitte. He has been much villified and traduced. The criminality of his amuggling consisted in its being more open than much of the smuggling now carried on in your city."

Our companion then proceeded to relate many interesting incidents in Lafitte's life, some of which we will endeavor to lay before our readers in future numbers of our paper. He concluded his narrative by describing Lafitte's personal appearance. "He was a tall, rather raw-boned man, of lively black eye, pleasing face, sallow complexion, and good address. There was nothing of the pirate or free-booter about him. His nature was kind and benevolent, and his heart was in the right place." We understand that Mr. Wm. M. Monroe has been appointed mail agent along the line of the Madison and Indianapolis Railroad. Mr. M. is a good men.

Autumn. BY MISS FRANCES A. FULLER. Autumn breezes now are blowing, Groves with rainbow colors glowing, Flowers dim and faded growing, Fading with the year! Louder sounds the rushing river, Nor the forest leaves do quiver, Through their boughs the wild winds shiver, With a voice of fear. Wildly sweet is its low mouning,

Our sad hearts with rapture toning,

Clouds across the sky are straying,

Leaves in whirling eddies playing,

Birds their farewell notes essaying,

Making concert shrill.

In the forest shadows hiding, Mourning for the short abiding,

Spirits through the earth are gliding,

Of Earth's witching bloom;

Hear them when the daylight endeth,

When the dasky eve descende h,

All things into gloom.

With a wail of fear;

When the misty sunlight cometh,

Where the tinny cascade foameth,

Roam by wood, or field, or river,

Every where their voices quiver,

With a low sweet cadence ever,

Silence now more silent seemeth,

Now do I go forth communing,

My wild spirit rapture owning,

Of the spirit choir;

Fountains in my heart up-gushing.

With a welcome fire.

Did each season bring such gladness,

Rapture so mixed up with sadness,

Steal my heart away;

Bringing dim, unconscious dreaming,
